

High Resolution Ocean and Ice Models for Climate

Philip Jones

Los Alamos National Laboratory

In this presentation, we will describe the increased realism achieved using global ocean and ice simulations at high resolution. Improvements in the representation of surface currents and other aspects of ocean circulation will be presented. However, many challenges remain as we try to further improve simulations. We will describe algorithmic challenges and architecture challenges as we move beyond the petascale.